

Who Dun It—Explained

Dear reader,

Who Dun It presents a scenario where something has happened; no one on the scene could have done it; and it still needs to be explained.

This, if you think about it, is the case of creation. Here, too, something has happened; there is no worldly explanation; and still it needs to be explained.

The fact that there is no strictly “logical” answer doesn’t mean that there isn’t an answer.

Rather, the deed pleads to be explained, and it can be explained if we are able to think big and look beyond the mundane.

I hope this makes sense to you. I hope it makes you smile. And I hope you noticed that our cast of characters does a pretty good job of representing the people of this world. Perhaps it is also clear that these were people who needed to have their attention called to... what?

Certainly this was no random choice of picture.

Who dun it? It was God. God set up Creation.
